News from Kruse by Angie & Billie, Kruse House Garden Coordinators

From Olde News Now, West Chicago Historical Society's Nov-Dec 2011 newsletter

"a big thank you to the West Chicago Garden Club and their members for all the hard work they do on the garden at the Kruse house. We could not maintain this historic garden without all the time they volunteer and the dedication they bring to this project."

We appreciate the recognition of our efforts! Thanks for the thank you!

It has been a good year in the garden. We keep moving steadily forward and are satisfied with our progress. We want to recognize Tom Fessler's faithful presence and helpful efforts in the garden. It will be good to have our seasonal winter break. But, we plan to be back in full force when spring rolls around again. Until then we will be happy to view the pictures taken this year and toy with some new and better ideas for next year.

Fall Reflections by Don Engebretson

Each year at the end of the gardening season, I have a moment of remorse, when everything I dislike about gardening tumbles across my mind like the unkempt clusters of filthy gardening tools and oily power equipment currently usurping an entire parking space in my garage.

My fingernails have been some degree of dirty since April, all the while on exhibit to the public at restaurants, retail stores, business meetings, cocktail parties, weddings, and funerals. My back aches in the morning, and my left ankle—broken while snowboarding some years ago—stiffens by evening from six months of self-induced manual labor. I think of the hours I’ve lost this summer digging holes, pulling weeds, pruning shrubs, fertilizing flowers, laying stone, moving dirt, and mowing that godforsaken lawn.

I try not to think of the money spent.

Is it all worth it, I ask myself? Of course it is. My remorse lasts but an instant before it is overpowered by memories of countless gracious moments bestowed only on those who garden.

I remember spring, when a glance at dry and winter-beaten evergreens revealed the amazing emergence of soft and succulent candles of the freshest green. Tiny sprigs of leaves appeared on shrubs and trees, while the tender tips of perennials nudged aside last year’s skeletal remains to reclaim (and enlarge!) their spot on earth. I saw, but more important, felt my tiny patch of planet awaken from desolate slumber, and soon I was blissfully in step with the true and primordial rhythm of the earth. Anyone with eyes notices the landscape greening up, but the intricate magic behind nature’s rejuvenation is gleaned only by the gardener.

I remember the giving and receiving of many plants during the summer, to and from whom (and exactly which plants) I need not remember. To garden is to share. To comment favorably about a perennial in the garden of a neighbor (or that of a barest acquaintance) is to solicit the automatic response, “You want a piece of it?” It’s a little game, a skit only gardeners can play, where everyone knows their lines and no one keeps track of how much they’ve given or received; it all evens out. A pot, a spading fork, and a hose appear, and in the back of your pickup or trunk of your car you drive home with a prized new possession, a gift of life from a fellow gardener.

I remember solving all my and the world’s problems while watering in early morning. One day I had eased away all anxiety about a potential business problem before I was halfway finished flooding a bed of thirsty Ligularia. A dazzling lead sentence for an article on shade gardening that was refusing to write itself popped into my head while I was giving a newly planted magnolia a good, stiff drink.

I love watering plants. The soft, hypnotic sound of water being sucked into the earth, combined with the utter mindlessness of the activity, bathes the brain in intensely creative juices. Whenever I hit a brick wall while writing, I get up, walk outside, and water. Arriving back at my computer, new words inevitably flow. Watering is better than music for soothing the beast within. When I receive bad news, I water; when angry, I water; when my garden needs water, I water. No matter the reasons, when turning off the hose, I always feel at peace.

There are those with fancy irrigation systems that automatically water fine gardens installed for them by others; the keepers of these homes are too busy and too important to water the nameless plants themselves, and that’s fine. Their houses will always be bigger than mine, their bankbooks fatter, and they will die with more toys than I, but they will never know what happens to heart and soul when you gently wake the bees at sunrise while watering a garden.

This magazine is associated with the Minnesota State Horticultural Society, and is one of 6 magazines sponsored by WCGC at the West Chicago Public Library to broaden the world of gardening for our community. Be sure to check them out yourself! Thanks to Billie Childress for arranging for permission to reprint!
